DID YOU KNOW?

Our top D-I-Y tip is NEVER use a ladder and a chainsaw at the same time! Many of the horror stories our customers tell us involve both a ladder and a chainsaw. This is not surprising given that both tools make Popular Mechanic's list of the Top 5 Most Dangerous Tools! Tree care professionals avoid using ladders whenever possible, opting for a harness and ropes to secure the chainsaw operator.

2 Words...Tree Preservation

Extremes of snow, ice and wind, and worst of all, low, low temperatures can take their toll on your landscape.

Damage to trees and shrubs is quite common and even turf and groundcovers are vulnerable. After last winter's ice storm many clients asked us what can be done to prevent such severe damage again. As in many other aspects of life, we follow the old adage that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. FERTILIZE YOUR TREES & SHRUBS Proper pruning and cabling (when necessary) reduces the damage caused by what a bad winter can throw at us.

Our arborists recommend pruning your trees during the winter when they are dormant. This prevents the spread of disease, helps the arborist with increased visibility for form development and disease/hazard detection, and minimizes shock to the tree because of leaf loss. As an added bonus, when the ground is frozen there is minimal damage to lawns, gardens or the forest floor. Even after doing everything possible to prevent winter damage it sometimes happens. Trees and shrubs that experience moderate storm damage can often make a full recovery over time. When damage occurs, remove broken limbs immediately, and have one of our certified arborists perform crown restoration pruning within one growing season. Our professional arborists also offer pre-winter assessments of your landscape to identify potential problems, and they are available to perform storm damage emergency work at any time.

Thoughts from the Tree House

Q: How does a tree get on the internet?

A: It 'logs-in.

I cannot endure to waste anything as precious as autumn sunshine by staying in the house. So I spend almost all the daylight hours in the open air."

—NATHANIEL HAWTHORNE (1804-1864)

"I'm so glad I live in a world where there are Octobers.

Autumn is a second spring when every leaf is a flower."
